BOI reporting is paused. Now what?

We're closely watching the unfolding situation since a federal district court ruled the Corporate Transparency Act unconstitutional last week. Currently, the court order prohibits enforcement of the beneficial ownership information (BOI) reporting rule.

The U.S. Department of Justice has filed a formal notice of appeal challenging the injunction. Because the situation is ongoing and fluid, we are telling members to continue to assist clients with BOI report filings and gather required information so, if the injunction is lifted, clients are prepared to file.

FinCEN reminds companies they are currently not subject to liability for not filing only while the order remains in force. They can continue to voluntarily submit BOI reports. More information:

Experts in Merchant Service Fee Reduction

We are NOT a credit card processor or provider but an advocate to help businesses ensure they can negotiate the lowest cost with their existing payment processor. We are hired to negotiate, audit and optimize credit card processing fees for our clients without them switching or changing their current processor or software system.

Lower processing fees:

We audit your accounts and negotiate lower credit card processing rates, driving down your merchant fees with your current payment processor.

We only make money when you save money:

We share a percentage of the savings we can find our clients. If there are no savings, we make no money.

Monthly monitoring:

When rates increase, our team works to get the rates back down and issue any applicable refunds.

Merchant Cost Consulting can lower credit card merchant fees for businesses without the need to switch the business's credit card processing company.
